LINDEN HALL 1746-1921

By HERBERT H. BECK

THIS Historical Sketch of Linden Hall, which is made possible by the researches and translations of Herman A. Brickenstein and Abraham R. Beck, reaches back in its first stroke to 1746. In November of that year the Moravian Brethren broke sod for their house of worship and following the enlightened traditions of their bishop of the seventeenth century, John Amos Comenius, they planted seeds of learning and culture, for the building was to be a Gemeinhaus—in Moravian usage, a chapel, schoolhouse and parsonage combined.

George Klein, farmer and extensive landholder, had donated three and three-quarter acres, of his vast tract about the big spring, as site, garden and meadow of the Gemeinhaus. This plot was about 1600 yards east of the springhead and the new building occupied the first prominent declivity along the south bank of the stream.

* * * * * * *

The historical background of this simple beginning, of high destiny, must center about the coming of Count Zinzendorf to America to visit the Bethlehem and Nazareth communities, the less compact settlements of Moravians elsewhere and the Indian missions. In the course of a farewell visitation, in 1742, the founder of renewed Moravianism preached at Jacob Huber's in Warwick Township in the stone house, still in use in 1921, which stands 500 yards west of the Lititz-Brunnerville and Pennville-Rothsville crossroads on the old Newport road. Klein, whose land adjoined Huber's, was prejudiced against Zinzendorf and it was only after a night of restless remorse, brought on by absenting himself from the meeting at his neighbor's house, that his antipathy softened. It was a time of high religious consciousness. The next day Klein followed Zinzendorf to Lancaster and hearing him preach in the courthouse, was greatly impressed and moved.

This incident determined the whole course of subsequent important events on the big spring farm; for not only did Klein make the Gemeinhaus grant, but in 1754, when Zinzendorf was prospecting for an appropriate place for the establishment of a third religious community to be similar to Bethlehem and Nazareth, Klein came forward with an offer of his entire tract of 491 acres for the purpose.

Thus the town had its start. Two years later word came from Zinzendorf that it was to be named Lititz, after the barony Lititz in Bohemia where the struggling church of the ancient Brethren had found refuge in 1456, just three hundred years before.

The early structural features of the settlement were the Brethren's and Sisters' houses which were built between 1758 and '61. These institutions were part of Zinzendorf's plan of a religious community. Unlike the communities of Bethlehem and Nazareth, where there was absolute merging of individual effort and gain to the common good, Lititz had the rigorous devotional life of these settlements without their economic solidarity. For purposes of religious supervision, education and employment the unmarried of both sexes were segregated into "choirs." That the plan, within its day and generation, proved practicable and effective is shown by the records of these "choir" houses as well as by historical evidence from without. The people were intelligent as well as deeply religious and all diversion which was to relieve the serious training of mind and soul must be cultural. Music and art were encouraged and the former, particularly, was largely developed. As early as 1765 there was a full orchestra in the Brethren's House, taught by Grubè, which played the works of standard composers.

Early life in the Sisters' House, which is inseparably connected with the girls' school, is portrayed in occasional references in the diaries of the institution and the congregation; and also, with more delicate touch, in the classic memoirs and letters of Sister Mary Penry, a Welsh woman who, on account of some deep sorrow, had left a circle of friends, prominent and influential in the Philadelphia of her day, to live in the Moravian community.

"The intent of all the Choir houses" Sister Penry writes to her friend Mrs. Drinker in 1783 "is no other than a school for piety, virtue and industry."

The Moravian Sisters lived lives of voluntary, though often but temporary, partial seclusion from the world about them. They took no vows of any kind and they were free to enter or leave the community house at any time. There was no distinctive dress, though white caps tied with pink ribbon were usually worn. The outward concerns of the house were under the direction of a Sister especially qualified while the spiritual guidance of the community was given over to a pflegerin whose office corresponded to that of a lady superior. Sewing, knitting, embroidering and weaving afforded the usual means of livlihood, most of the orders in these lines coming from Lancaster and Philadelphia. During and for some years after the revolutionary period stocking weaving was a large industry in the Sisters' House. Rooms, equipped in a simplicity approaching austerity, were to be had at nominal charges or in special cases gratis. There was a room for the sick and a regularly appointed nurse. In the "Betsaal" or chapel evening prayers were held and also special services on church or memorial days.

The world of the outside from the point of view of the devout Sisters' House often appeared dark. Nothing perhaps could better indicate the high social and religious contrasts of Colonial America than the letter of Sister Penry which says "Murder and robbery are very frequent in the neighborhood. We are almost afraid to go to Lancaster, at least on foot. Impiety seems to gain ground everywhere according to the papers; your city abounds with every kind of sinful pastime and up in the country libertinism of every kind prevails. Melancholy times these."

* * * * * * *

Into this genial atmosphere of the secluded village the little school system of the Warwick Gemeinhaus grew. Started with three girls and four boys under the supervision of the Reverend Leonard Schnell and his wife, and subsequently under Brother Neibert, it was continued on, at the original site, in sturdy sincerity of purpose, until after the formation of the church square, which was laid out by Bishop Spangenberg in 1757, and the clearing of the road in 1761 from Reading to Anderson's Ferry (or Marietta)—now Main street in Lititz—when, in 1766, the school was moved body and spirit to a point opposite the church square. Here it was used as a boys' school for a number of years.

The girls' school was continued in the Sisters' House—the Castle of to-day—after August, 21, 1766. Entries in the congregation diary reflect something of its expanding influence.

"Sept. 14, 1767, from Lancaster came Sisters Hopson and Graeff (George) with their children to place them on trial at the girls' school (Mädchen Anstalt). For the present they will have their sleeping place at Fenstermacher's." (Which was a few yards west of the Church square on the south side of the street.)

"Sept. 24. Sister George Graeff came from Lancaster and in a very troubled state of mind prayed us to give her again her children for without them she could not live. The children, who were already quite at home here, bade farewell to their playmates with many tears and followed their mother."

"Sept. 24. Little Katie Graeff (Ketje Graefin) came again with Brother Hopson from Lancaster. She had begged permission to return and received it. The children were delighted to take her again into their midst."

Soon increasing demands seemed to justify the erection of a new building for the girls' school. On May 22, 1769 the cornerstone of the Mädchen Anstalt was laid by Bishop Hehl.

On November 14 of the same year after a lovefeast service the girls "went over into the new house"—which consisted of what is now the principal's office and part of the dining room of the present Linden Hall. On this date the school had sixteen pupils and two teachers.

Two years later—for some reason which time has effaced—word came from the General Synod of the church that the new school must not be called officially an Anstalt.

Continued patronage from beyond the village circle and nominal obedience to the order of the Synod is shown in an entry of May 30, 1773. "Bro. Wm. Henry (Lancaster) brought his eight year old daughter to school. She was placed in special charge of Sister Burstein in the Kinderhaus."

Shortly, through some change in conditions, the new school building had to be temporarily abandoned. In 1775 an entry shows that "the number of girls having dwindled to four and they even, owing to necessities of home and harvest, having been absent all summer, the Elders' Conference resolved to abandon the school altogether."

Now for a few years the girls received their education in the Sisters' House and in the Gemeinhaus opposite. The Anstalt building in 1776 was sold to and occupied by Dr. Adolph Meyer.

The storm which was breaking was to swirl into this quiet corner of the Pennsylvania Colony and greatly disturb its life. After Brandywine came the order from General Washington that the Brethren's House was to be taken over as a military hospital. The winter of 1777-78 was almost as dark at Lititz as it was at Valley Forge for camp fever, which had broken out among the disabled soldiers in the Brethren's House, spread into the village and many of the congregation died of it. The sight of the rough hewn coffins being hauled from the hospital down the main street to a point east of the village was a common one to the sisters.

The first entry in the years of brightening skies and one which indicates an occasional want of room in the Sisters' House, is on Oct. 11, 1784. "Girls' school is being held in the cabinet until the sisters can again find place for it in their house." The "cabinet" or Weaver's house as it was sometimes called, was a small frame building to the westward and within a few yards of the Castle. It was removed in 1910.

In May 1787, Dr. Meyer having died six years before the board of overseers bought back the Anstalt house from the Meyer heirs for £300 "that we can control the future residents there. It is too near the Sisters' House and according to our plan the unnecessary in and outgoing of single brethren must be carefully avoided. The congregation owning it will have the freedom to rent it to some one who has no particular connection with single brethren."

In the summer of 1794 an incident occurred which broadened the scope of the simple parochial school and determined its position of wide influence in education for women in America. Mrs. Marvel of Baltimore, on a visit to Lititz, was so much impressed with the conditions and atmosphere of the Sisters' House that she asked permission to place her nine year old daughter Margaret in care of the Sisters. After some hesitation this was granted and on September 7 "Little Peggy," as she was usually called, arrived and became the first pupil from other than Moravian families. Soon came Sarah Schaeffer of Tulpehocken, and within a few years many others. Sister Penry writing in 1799 says "We have a pretty little boarding school and eight fine girls. The youngest is from Baltimore and not quite seven years of age. Numerous applications have been made and are still making but as we cannot increase our number for want of teachers everyone must wait for a vacancy."

The entry of Dec. 24, 1799 in the Sisters' House diary is a vignette of the life and season: "Our boarders were stationed behind the putz (garden about the base of the Christmas tree) where they played the piano. Kitty DeWitt, not yet seven years of age, gave us especial pleasure by her singing of hymns. She kept the melody wonderfully well."

Sister Penry writes, in a letter of April 18, 1801 "Last week our children had their examination and many from Lancaster who had girls in our boarding school came here to see and hear what improvement their children had made. They were examined in spelling, reading and writing, German and English, arithmetic, grammar, geography, music, knitting, tambour and embroidery or satin stitch as I believe you call it more properly. I enclose one of the themes which one of our boarders of eight years of age pronounced with ease and energy on her favorite branch of learning, music, in which she bids fair to be a proficient. The parents were extremely gratified and were moved to tears at the piety which was visible in their music and singing. * * * Our children in general are pliable and good natured and not corrupted in their manner. * * * Our boarders are not permitted to keep any novels during their stay with us. They have books fit for children and young persons: History, the Spectator, Guardian, etc.

When they are from under our tuition they are to do as their friends think proper—our care is at an end."

At the close of the year 1801 the twenty girls present were Carl Graeff, Julian Fischer, Eliza Gundacker, Rachel Watson, Elizabeth Clingen, Harriet Carpentier, Rosetta Work, Anna Clarke, Nancy Jacobs, Eliza Jacobs, Kitty Stump, Polly Strickler, Sally Fahnestock, Mary A. Duncan, Elizabeth Schnerzauer, Katy Stoner, Henrietta Stineman, Polly Fahnestock, Rebecca Alexander and Rebecca Blaine. This was an increase of seven over the year 1800 and twelve over 1799.

The reminiscences of Mrs. Haldeman, written for the Linden Hall Echo prior to 1884, are a notable feature of the scant historical records of the school. Mrs. Haldeman, who entered as Eliza Jacobs aged 11, in 1800, was the daughter of one of the group of iron masters prominent and picturesque in Pennsylvania history during the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries. Her father operated furnaces in northern Lancaster County and elsewhere. Mrs. Haldeman was an interested visitor and an honored guest at Linden Hall after she had passed her ninetieth year.

Of the period between 1800 and 1802 Mrs. Haldeman says, "The principal of the school was Rev. John Herbst, a short, stout man and a very fine musician. Miss Sallie Fetter, an agreeable lady, was a teacher of music and an excellent performer. Sister Rosel Beyer taught sewing, knitting and darning. Among the other teachers were Sister Polly Heckewelder, daughter of the well known Indian missionary and pioneer of the western frontier. She taught ornamental needle work—for which the school was famous. Sister Heckewelder was the first white child born in Ohio. Sister Krueger was superintendent of the Sisters' House and received all visitors. The cook was Katie Protzman. The fare was plain but good and plentiful. A hymn was sung before and after each meal. Breakfast consisted mainly of bread and milk. There was always soup for dinner. In the afternoon there was a 'four o'clock piece' of bread and butter.

The girls took turns acting as day keeper. The duties of this office were manifold. The day keeper spread the tables and brought the coffee and bread from the kitchen and said grace at the table. She swept the rooms and made the wood fires for which purpose she got up earlier than the rest. This was something of a trial in winter when it was dark and the day keeper, with tallow candle in hand, had to wade through the snow, as it sometimes happened.

Walks were taken every day usually to the spring, which was then already arched over and the grounds—not as large as now—were provided with seats. Three times a week there was a children's meeting in the church to which all the scholars went. The church was not warmed in winter but the services were very short. Some of the aged people brought foot-warmers, consisting of a tin case in which live coals were placed. Sister Verona Snyder, a cousin of Governor Snyder, was the spiritual adviser of the Sisters and the girls. Every month the latter were required to go, two at a time, to see her and have a private religious conversation with her. She was a kind, gentle soul, and whatever dread or embarrassment may have been felt beforehand soon disappeared in her presence.

Birthdays were always marked by a little festivity. On such occasions, in fine weather, the girls went to the Spring carrying a bottle of current wine and a basket of cakes by way of refreshments. Sometimes on their birthdays they invited the principal or the pastor to a little feast which was held under the trees on the declivity between the church and the graveyard. On such occasions the girls greeted the reverend gentlemen with the singing of a hymn.

A special favorite of the girls was 'Pappy' Lanius, innkeeper of the Zum Anker. 'Pappy' Blickensderfer took them on short excursions to Lancaster, Manheim and Ephrata where they usually got supper. 'Pappy' Reich was a dignified German gentleman, who gave the girls a party at his house every Christmas.

An important part of the dress of the period was a white cap with a pink ribbon which was worn to church and in class. The cap was crimped and the bow was tied so as just to take in the chin. The tying of these caps and their starching and ironing were considered a great art. It was a sight to see a waiter full of these beautifully 'done up' caps. A cap was expected to last a week. Only calico was worn—a skirt, with a long sack and always an apron. Ruffles were unknown. Very few printed text books were used and all the music was in manuscript, printed copy being very expensive. Music was diligently cultivated.

The usual allowance of pocket money was 11 d, about 20 cents a week, which was spent mainly for mint drops at the little shop in the Sisters' House.

We were a very happy innocent company. There was no homesickness. We respected everybody and loved everybody and received only kindness and the most tender care. What I like best to remember, as I look back over those eighty years, is that I was a good girl."

Mrs. Leah Dale, who was a pupil between 1802 and 1804, has added to this delightful memoir the line, "Miss Fetter often spoke of Mrs. Haldeman's wonderful musical talent. She said Eliza Jacobs was so small that she stood on a footstool to enable her to practice on the quaint old piano, and her little fingers were far too short to stretch an octave. Fresh in my memory is the visit we paid that beautiful cemetery early Easter morning. After we moved into the new house our dining room was in the basement, the meals being brought over from the Sisters' House kitchen."

The Sisters' House and the "cabinet" soon being severely taxed for room the Anstalt house was again made part of the school. A third story and a wing were added and other improvements made. On Oct. 26, 1804 the enlarged and renovated building was dedicated, with ceremony and happiness, and on the same day six teachers and twenty four pupils moved into it.

During the first ten years of the boarding school, from 1794–1804, sixty-three pupils entered. Many of the girls were quite young and had to be placed in the separate charge of a Sister.

The fees at this time for a year's board and tuition, four quarters of twelve weeks each, was £ 30 Pennsylvania currency or from $86 to $120 according to the shifting values of the pound sterling. The charge for piano instruction was 6 d per half hour.

Subsequent historical record of the early years of the nineteenth century is sparse. The school—again termed Anstalt despite the edict of the Synod—probably because after 1804 it was thought to be more deserving of the name—had passed through its initial period and was broadening out with the expanding republic. Unfortunately few of the many interesting events that doubtless took place about the school were recorded. The only available data are a note of the visit of Governor McKean and his wife in 1805; an entry "that the first class set out with their tutoresses in two stages for a visit to Mrs. Work and Dr. Watson in Donegal and Mrs. Stump in Columbia" (1807), and a couple of printed circulars, one of 1813 advising patrons that sixteen would be the age limit thereafter and another (1822) in which it was set forth as desirable "that such as are admitted should have had the smallpox, cowpox and measles."

In 1838 when the Rev. Eugene Frueauff assumed the principalship there were twenty-eight boarding pupils. In 1844 the main school building was enlarged, principal's apartments, parlor, and prayer hall being added. About this time the name Linden Hall was given to the school by Mr. and Mrs. Frueauff who planted the basswood saplings that were destined to add so much to the school besides its name.

About 1857, during the principalship of Julius T. Bechler, with the passing of the old choir house system the Sisters' House or Castle was made part of Linden Hall Seminary.

In 1863, when under the direction of William C. Reichel, the institution was incorporated by the legislature. The years immediately following the civil war were times of almost unprecedented prosperity the school being filled to its utmost capacity.

In 1874, under the supervision of Hermann A. Brickenstein, a settled course of study, leading to a graduation diploma, was instituted and in 1880 post graduate work was begun. In 1875 the Castle was thoroughly renovated within and a wing was added.

On July 4, 1883, Geo. W. Dixon, the donor, turned the first sod for the beautiful memorial chapel which was to bear the name of his daughter. On Oct. 7 of the same year the cornerstone was laid and walled in with a school catalog, a copy of the Echo, a Chapel hymn and text book, some coins and the gold medal won at school by Mary Dixon in 1877. The dedication took place in 1885. Three years later a hail storm of unusual weight broke the beautiful buff and maroon tiles of the north slope of the roof and they were replaced with slate.

In 1907, during the principalship of Charles D. Kreider the new auditorium and gymnasium building was added.

In 1919-21, under F. William Stengel, extensive additions and improvements were made to both of the main buildings and the new pleasure ground and athletic field to the southeast was laid out.

* * * * * * *

The roster of the principals of Linden Hall contains the names of many talented and worthy men who have given their best energies to their work. Seven were capable musicians and two of them, John Herbst and John C. Bechler, were composers of lasting merit. Several were gifted naturalists—among them William C. Reichel and one, at least, Hermann A. Brickenstein, is remembered for his researches and writings in local history. All were men of high mental calibre and lofty ideals.

Often the principal's wife was the mother as well as the supervisor of her pupils. Many such an one has lived on in the affections of "her girls."

Unfortunately, for lack of data, sketches of the lives and characters of these men and women cannot be drawn. Most of the world's greatest biographies never reach the printed page; their substance is spread upon the fiber of civilization. Far more than in the rock of its walls and the beam of its halls the noble edifice of the old school rests upon the imperishable contributions of body, mind and soul made by the sturdy Moravian pioneers and by these men its principals:

John Herbst, 1794-1802; John Meder, 1802-1805; John F. Frueauff, 1805-1815; Andrew Benade, 1815-1822; John C. Bechler, 1822-1824; Samuel Reinke, 1824-1826; John G. Kummer, 1826-1830; Charles F. Kluge, 1830-1836; Peter Wolle, 1836-1838; Eugene A. Frueauff, 1838-1855; Julius T. Bechler, 1855-1862; William C. Reichel, 1862-1868; Eugene A. Frueauff, 1868-1873; Hermann A. Brickenstein, 1873-1892; Charles B. Shultz, 1892-1897; Charles L. Moench, 1897-1898; Charles D. Kreider, 1898-1912; Ernest S. Hagen, 1912-1915; F. William Stengel, 1915–

* * * * * * *

OR a hundred and seventy-five years the school has run its even course—like the rippling stream by whose banks it had its start—giving forth its sweetness and culture on its way. Ten thousand homes have been beautified by its soft influence, and a great nation—budding, blossoming, and come to flower—has felt the contribution of its quiet power.

Since the days of the pink stringed cap a vast and socially complex civilization has come up in the land. Since Polly Heckewelder the broadening lights of science have remade human thought and changed the themes and schemes of education. But amidst a wealth of modern benefits, collected through a century from the far corners of the world's mind, there is nothing which Linden Hall has to give that is more precious than the simple spirit of her ancient heritage—the spirit which has come down from the old Sisters' House to teach the Peggy Marvels of to-day and the Kitty DeWitts of the future the golden lesson that gentility of manner can attain to winsome grace only when it is attended by gentility of heart.

To Linden Hall

Dear Alma Mater be
Lovingly gratefully
Shrined in our hearts:
To thee our praise we bring,
We'll make the welkin ring
With joyous singing
Dear Linden Hall.

Dear gentle Mother thou
To whom our spirits bow
With reverence fair;
Let us both young and old
On thy dear books enrolled
Strive in ways manifold
To enrich thy fame.

Let us with thankful hearts
All do our noble parts
In God's great plan;
This our blest Mother taught,
This glorious work she wrought,
This the high prize she sought.
Hail Linden Hall!
